Who hears the appeal?
If you work for the city of Carmel and you are fired, you can appeal -- but if a pending rule change is adopted, the person who fired you also will hear your appeal. City Administrator Jack Collins, who would hear the appeals, said he could be fair even though he would be considering his own decision to fire. Page 2.

Annexation takes the stage
Next Tuesday, the proposal to double the size of Carmel through annexation could die as quickly as it started. Pros and cons will be heard by the Monterey County Local Agency Formation Commission, which has the power to either halt the move for annexation or advance it to the next step. Page 3.

Bank robber still at large
A bank robber in his 20s is still at large after taking a reported $1,200 from United California Bank in Carmel last week. The robbery was the second in the history of Carmel. The first robber was apprehended 12 minutes after he hit at the old Carmel Savings and Loan Association. Page 3.

Nielsen's will move
After 50 years in the same location, Nielsen Bros. Market has decided to move to a new location in Carmel. The plan is to build a two-story market at Seventh and San Carlos. The corner property is where Leidig's Texaco Station is located. Last month, the service station went out of business. Page 3.

Realty agents upset
City-imposed design review on new houses would make Carmel a city where new buildings look alike, real estate agents told the Carmel Planning Commission last week. The commissioners who favor design review denied that, but they were unable to explain the need for city review of residential architecture. Page 6.

There's a catch
Plans to build a hotel on the Odello artichoke field south of the Carmel River have gotten snagged on a catch-22. Sewage from the development could be handled locally, the Carmel Sanitary District Board of Directors has said. But the directors also said that is not possible until the ban on annexation to the sewer district is lifted. Page 7.

Discharge ban rapped
One of its biggest customers has urged the Carmel Sanitary District to appeal the state ruling that sewage discharge into Carmel Bay be halted six months out of the year. Directors of the Pebble Beach Sanitary District, which pays Carmel to dispose of waste from Del Monte Forest, have urged the state Water Resources Control Board to re-examine the ban. Carmel directors, however, cannot decide if the appeal is worthwhile at this stage. Page 8.

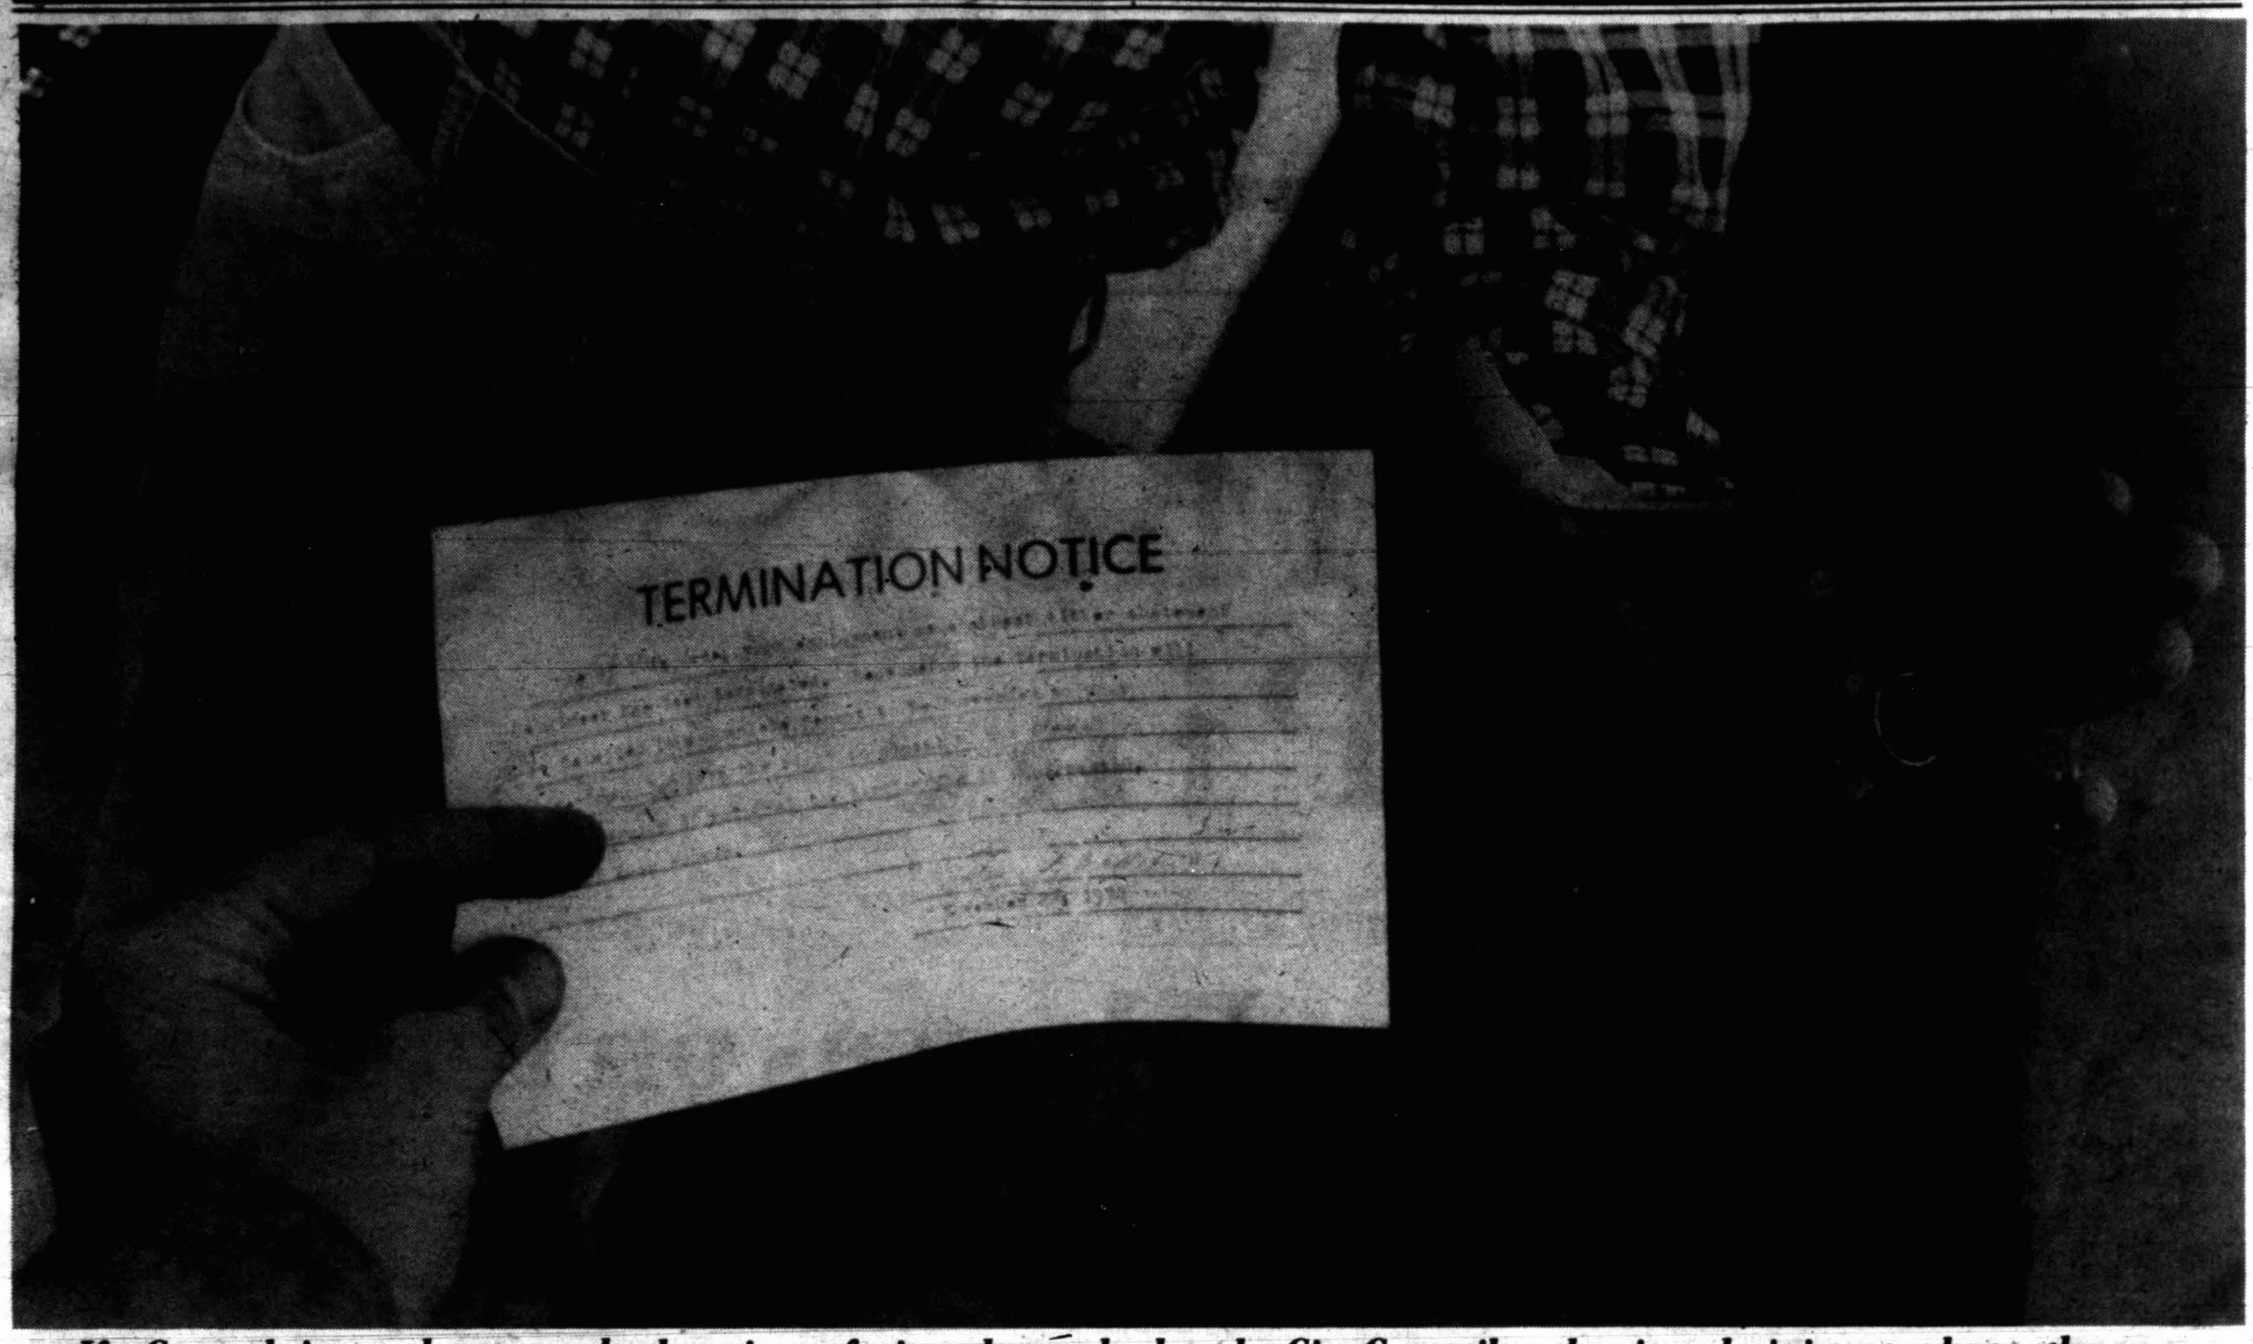
Joke was on them

STUDENTS FROM PACIFIC Grove High School got a boot out of "saiding" Carmel as a prelude to Saturday's big game, but out on the gridiron the Padres won "The Shoe," the ceremonial spoils to the winner of the cross-hill rivals. Each year, Pacific Grove students drive down Ocean Avenue honking horns, whistling and raising hob with the locals. Staff photographer Kirk McClelland snapped this photo of four unidentified P.G. partisans Friday afternoon. Carmel won the game, 21-0.

The Village



If a Carmel city worker appeals, there is confusion about whether the City Council or the city administrator hears the case.

Administrator, council, citizens board?

City worker firings: Who should hear the appeal?

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

SUPPOSE YOU ARE hired as a fireman in Carmel. Naturally, the city administrator does the hiring. One year later he fires you for allegedly being drunk at work. You appeal his decision because you believe he was wrong.

It turns out the appeals officer is the city administrator. Should he hear an appeal of his own decision? Or is that a job that should be given to the City Council or an appeals board composed of citizens?

City officials are having a difficult time answering those questions. It used to be the council's domain. It hired employees. It fired them. It also acted as an appeals board. Those powers, however, were transferred to City Administrator Jack Collins in July 1977.

The personnel section of the City Code has passages that give appeals power to the councilmen. It still empowers the council to deal with employee matters. City officials have spent more than a year redrafting it.

The process of revision has been painstaking. Collins has discussed the changes with City Hall department heads, employees and representatives from the four municipal employee associations. The result is a revised ordinance that should clarify who has the final say in employee firings. In this case, that would be Collins.

The proposed revisions are scheduled for discussion when the City Council meets Monday, Dec. 4. Some councilmen are hesitant to relinquish powers to Collins. Two councilmen claim it is their responsibility to act as an appeals board. Another councilman insists it is Collins' job. A representative from one employee association said both sides are wrong. The answer is an impartial grievance board, he said.

"It is just shuffling an inequitable responsibility to a sole person instead of a group. It really doesn't matter if the appeals board is the council or Collins. Inside the city, you're still going to have city pressures and city politics," said Chuck August, president of the Carmel Fire Department Association. He suggested an appeals board composed of a city representative, an employee representative and an independent third party.

"Until now, nobody really cared about a democratic way for dismissing employees," August said.

ONE CITY THAT has an appeals board composed of citizens is Gilroy. Established in 1960, the Gilroy Personnel Committee hears employee appeals that include unjustified firings.

Although the city manager hires and fires, he does not determine the merits of an appeal. If the committee upholds the manager's decision, the employee has the right to appeal its decision to the Gilroy City Council.

Gilroy is much larger than Carmel and it has more municipal employees. But like Carmel, Gilroy's employees are not affiliated with a labor union.

There are five residents who sit on the Gilroy committee. The mayor appoints them subject to confirmation by the city council.

Fred Wood, the Gilroy city manager, strongly supports the appeals system. He has been the manager there for 15 years.

In a telephone interview, he said he would consider it a conflict of interest for him to judge appeals of his own decisions. "For me to terminate employees, then sit as a hearings officer just would not be fair," Wood said.

NO EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES suggested a citizens appeals board during discussions with the city, Collins said. "Besides, it would be a violation of any effort to provide a reasonable and fair personnel system," Collins added.

Asked if he could be impartial hearing appeals of his own decisions, Collins replied, "It doesn't matter if I'm impartial. What matters is if I'm fair."

Only one employee has been fired by Collins since he started work here. There was no appeal.

COLLINS SAID THE proposed revision gives the employees what they want. "The employees wanted some appeals guarantees, but they didn't feel the council was the appropriate appeals agency. The employees have had bitter appeals confrontations with the council in the past," he said.

August, a fire engineer, disagreed with Collins in a separate interview. "Collins has done a good job. He's been fair. But the way the revision is worded, if Collins doesn't like you, he can fire you. That is not a real neat way to have the municipal code outlined," he said.

The revision also states, however, that Collins must consult with the appropriate department head before he can fire a city employee.

"What good would an appeal do?" August said. "The end result is in Collins' hands anyway."

That is where it should be, maintained Councilman Howard Brunn. "When you give a person the power to hire, you also give him the power to fire," he said.

"Collins is doing a good job. He's a good man. He is qualified and trained for the job. Why should the council short-circuit his ability to function as a city administrator?" Brunn asked.

Councilman Leslie Gross seemed to answer that question. "When he fires someone, the guy can only appeal to him. The door's already shut. It doesn't seem fair," Gross said.

"The council has a tendency to turn too much responsibility away from itself and over to someone else. We don't want to be dictators, but neither should we shrug our duties," Gross said.

Councilman Mike Brown agreed. "We should be the ultimate boss. Each and every employee would be able to go to us as a grievance board. It would be going to a city body that is outside the daily routine," Brown said.

The city administrator would be in an awkward position is the council overruled his decision, Brown admitted. But he added, "It's a question of who's running the ship."

CARMEL APPEALS METHODS are not much different from those practiced in other Peninsula cities. In Pacific Grove, city employees may request informal hearings with the city manager, the assistant city manager and the department head who is their superior. Monterey city employees take their final appeals to the city council.

The Carmel Police Department Association has not endorsed the revisions, according to Officer Kenneth O'Donovan, the president. The city's original proposal offered no appeals. But police are guaranteed appeals under the state Peace Officer Bill of Rights. The police officers have not voted on whether they approve of Collins as a hearings officer, he said.

"Personally, I'd endorse Collins as a hearings officer. I think he's a fair man," O'Donovan said.

Representatives from the two other municipal employee associations said they did not object to Collins serving as the hearings officer.

"The council hired him to be in full charge of personnel. We support it. If not, we'd have requested a change. The department heads are all satisfied with the decision," said Police Chief William Ellis. Ellis is the president of the Carmel Management Personnel Association. It is composed primarily of City Hall department heads.

"The way it was presented to us, we assumed we'd get a fairer deal. One on one is easier than with the council, which was five on one. This is more simplified," said Lois Jones, president of the Carmel Employees' Association. She represents public works employees and clerical workers.

"He is a fair man. I don't think we'll have a problem there," she said of Collins.

Annexation push could end as swiftly as it started

FIREWORKS ARE EXPECTED to begin shortly after Salinas Mayor Henry Hibino gavels the Local Agency Formation Commission to order Tuesday in Carmel.

The county commission and its chairman can expect a full house and hours of debate at Sunset Center because the agenda topic is one that has divided the community.

LAFCO will recommend whether to annex 680 acres of land and 3,500 people to the city of Carmel, virtually doubling the size of the city in both land area and population.

The annexation proposal would stretch the city boundaries to Pescadero Canyon on the north, Highway 1 on the east, the Carmel River on the south and Carmel Bay to the west.

Both supporters and opponents of annexation are active in the community, gathering signatures and winning converts to their point of view.

About 500 people came to Sunset Center in September for an informational session on annexation. Another large crowd is expected for the 7 p.m. meeting Tuesday.

Annexation was proposed by the Monterey County Board of Supervisors as a logical extension of Carmel's governing authority into adjacent county areas similar in character to the city.

Michael Johnson, the LAFCO executive officer, recommended that the commission endorse the annexation proposal. His report and comments from Carmel City Administrator Jack Collins indicate there will be little change in the cost or quality of public

A COMPOSITE sketch of the bank robbery suspect was released last week by the Carmel Police Department. Any witnesses or persons who believe they know the suspect should contact the police.

Robbery suspect eludes the police

The suspect in Carmel's second bank robbery in history is still at large, a sharp contrast to the 12-minute capture of the earlier robber.

The Carmel Police Department has released a composite sketch of the suspect who stole an estimated $1,200 from the United California Bank at Ocean and Lincoln on Wednesday of last week.

The drawing serves in lieu of a photograph because the surveillance camera in the bank apparently did not photograph the robber, according to Carmel Police Chief William Ellis.

A study of the film by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents confirmed that the robber eluded the camera's eye.

"By our first viewing, it appeared that the suspect was not on the film," said Robert A. Bunch, supervising FBI agent in Monterey.

A joint investigation of the incident is being conducted by local police and the FBI.

According to police reports, the robber pulled a revolver on an unidentified teller at the bank at 12:42 p.m. last week. He had concealed the revolver in a folded newspaper.

When he approached the teller's cage, he showed her the weapon and passed her a note demanding cash in small denominations. The note was written on a bank withdrawal form, Ellis said.

All of the money was in bills and the largest denomination was $100, he said.

Police describe the suspect as a white male in his mid- to late 20s, six feet tall, 160 pounds with dark brown, medium-length hair. He was clean shaven and had a pock-marked complexion. He was wearing a brown windbreaker jacket with white vertical stripes along both sleeves.

The first bank robbery in Carmel happened Nov. 10, 1961, and ended in 12 minutes with the shooting and arrest of a suspect who later was convicted.

Then-Police Chief Clyde Klaumann was tipped off to the suspect's whereabouts and found him walking along Camino Real. The holdup occurred on a Friday afternoon at the now-defunct Carmel Savings and Loan Association.

Ordered to halt, the armed suspect bolted and Klaumann fired a shot, wounding the man in the hip. He found the suspect, a 23-year-old U.S. Army language student, crouched beneath some tree ferns at the nearby Wilfred van Loben Sells home.

The stolen money was not found with the suspect, but recovered the next day in a paper bag near the Church of the Wayfarer. The bag contained $1,311.

Water company cannot obtain drilling rights

California-American Water Co. is having problems negotiating for two high-yield well sites in the Lower Carmel Valley.

As a result, it may have to file an environmental impact report on all four of its proposed wells in the vicinity. Three weeks ago, it appeared the utility might avoid preparing one.

Circumstances changed when Cal-Am was unable to get agreements for two well sites near Cypress Road, west of Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club. The sites are owned by an unidentified private individual. Cal-Am is looking for two alternate sites now to go along with other wells planned at the golf club and at Rancho Canada Golf Club.

The company must apply again for use permits on the new well sites. If the Monterey County Planning Commission again recommends an EIR for the wells, the county board of supervisors appears ready to uphold that decision.

Three weeks ago, Supervisors Michal Moore, Edwin Norris and Kenneth Blohm voted against requiring an EIR.

Supervisors Sam Farr and Dusan Petrovic wanted the study because Valley residents fear the wells will lower the water table and kill vegetation that anchors the Carmel River banks and retards erosion.

Moore was to meet with Cal-Am representatives and Ed Lee of the Lower Carmel Valley Advisory Committee to set conditions for pumping from the wells.

In the interim, Cal-Am had to switch well locations. At the same time, the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board voted unanimously to request an EIR on the well proposal. Moore, chairman of the board, abstained from the vote. But he said later he may be ready to change his vote as a supervisor on the EIR issue.

"I'm not just representing myself," he said. "I'm also representing the (water) district."

Cal-Am wants the four wells so it can boost its total production to 22,000 acre-feet per year. The new wells, when pumped at capacity, would produce 5,000 acre-feet of water above and beyond the utility's current production.

Cal-Am spokesmen contend there is enough information available about the impact of the wells without going through the time-consuming and costly process of preparing an environmental report.

The issue goes back to the planning commission for a hearing next Wednesday.

Walkway for students proposed on Highway 1

District Superintendent Carl Wilsey told the school board last week that Caltrans representatives were not encouraging when he discussed the problem with them last month.

A change in traffic lane patterns might be the only short-range solution to the safety problems around Carmel High School.

He had the talk because the trustees are concerned about the volume of high-speed traffic around the high school. Since there are no marked pedestrian walkways along the side of Highway 1, trustees fear a student will be killed or injured while coming to school.

But Wilsey said the only solutions offered by Caltrans engineers would be costly and take a long time to put in place.

Their proposals were a pedestrian underpass at Ocean Avenue, an overpass across Highway 1 or possibly a third lane on the highway from Ocean Avenue to Rio Road.

They also were looking for support for the Hatton Canyon freeway project, which would direct the traffic load to the canyon below and to the east of the school.

Wilsey said an overpass would be "unsightly" and Trustee Elizabeth Bell said the underpass would require so much supervision that the school might benefit more just by having a traffic crossing guard on the highway.

Board Chairman Clayton Neill Jr. said the main problem he sees is with cars speeding up as they head south on Highway 1. This is caused, he said, when cars jockey for position as the road narrows from two lanes to one south of Ocean Avenue.

He said Wilsey should talk with Caltrans again about narrowing the road just north of Ocean Avenue. This, he said, might slow the cars down enough to reduce the danger of an accident.

But, Neill added, "Someone will probably have to be hit before anything is done."

Wilsey said he also will inquire about having a pedestrian walkway built on one side of Highway 1 so students can have a safe place to walk to school.

LEIDIG'S TEXACO Service, Seventh and San Carlos, went out of business Oct. 31. Last week, it was announced that Nielsen Bros. Market will build a new store at the site and occupy it in November 1979. Both Dale Leidig, the property owner, and Mervin Sutton, presidents of Nielsen's, are trying to find a location in Carmel for the Monterey Peninsula wall map (at left in photo) that helped many lost motorists who stopped at Leidig's. (Kirk McClelland photo)

Nielsen's Market moving to a new Carmel location

After a half-century on Dolores Street, Nielsen Bros. Market will move to a new, larger building to be constructed next year at the site of Leidig's Texaco Service, which went out of business Oct. 31.

The service station will be demolished to make room for a two-story grocery with underground parking. The site is at Seventh and San Carlos.

Mervin Sutton, president of the market, said the move is scheduled for November 1979. Sutton is the son-in-law of Walter Nielsen, who started the business 50 years ago with his brother, Harold.

Construction probably will start in March, Sutton said. He has obtained a lease from Dale Leidig, who owns the site and operated the service station until he decided to quit business.

Sutton said there would be room for 16 parking spaces underground at the 8,000 square-foot corner lot. The store will cover 6,000 square feet and have a second floor for offices and additional retail space. He said the second floor would cover 3,000 square feet. Combined area of the new store is triple what the market has at its location on Dolores near Seventh. Sutton plans to install an elevator motorists could ride to the street level.

Carmel architect Olof Dahlstrand has been hired to design the grocery store. Sutton said he wants a rustic appearance with rough wood siding. He said he plans to install antique fixtures inside the store.

Sutton said the expansion will involve additional hiring. He also said Nielsen's will stay open Sunday and some weeknights.

The service station closed after Leidig decided it would be too expensive to comply with anti-pollution regulations enforced by the Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control District. He faced a Nov. 1 deadline on installing vents for his underground fuel storage tanks. Leidig said the modifications would cost $16,000 because the tank openings were too small to be adapted with major expenses. The station was built more than 30 years ago.

Not joiners

Dear Editor:

We would much rather take our requests to Salinas than to the Carmel City Council, which is straight out of comic opera, as anyone who reads the Herald and the Pine Cone knows. Heaven forbid that we should get involved in that situation.

No increase in taxes under existing law—laws can be changed and we have no assurance that they will not be.

As to police protection—the present force would have to be enlarged and then it would probably be discovered that the present police station was too small and inadequate and a new one would be necessary and perhaps a new and larger City Hall.

Col. Step Tyner and others worked very hard to get us the fire protection of Area 43. It could not continue in its present strength under annexation. We wonder if the residents of the county area who now let their dogs run loose and walk them without a leash realize that a leash at all times would be mandatory under city ordinances or some stiff fines would result. There would undoubtedly have to be more animal control officers.

We lived in the city for 18 years before we moved into the county area and we like it this way. If we had wanted to live in the city, we would have stayed there. The City Council has enough so-called problems to play with now.

Correction

A date was incorrect in last week's story about evidence presented to show that the city knew of the rooftop solar heater installed by Councilman Helen Arnold. The story said a building application to the coastal commission was signed by the Carmel building inspector 10 months before a final city inspection of the house was made. The final inspection date—January 1978—was correct. The date of signature on the coastal application was reported as being March 31, 1978. It was March 31, 1977. We regret the error.

Games or toilets

Dear Editor:

This letter is prompted by the write-up and pictures in the Nov. 16 issue of the shuffleboard courts in Forest Hill Park.

I find it hard to believe that presumably sensible people could give any consideration to the proposal that $30,000 of the city's funds should be spent to replace a shuffleboard court being used "by fewer than eight men daily out of a club membership that totals about 20."

Parenthetically, this is a major part of the $67,700 in the current budget planned for this area—and if the rest of the project is as ill-conceived as the shuffleboard courts, I'd urge that the whole thing be reviewed and/or cut back, or better yet, postponed indefinitely.

There is an odd connection between the above comments and the letter in the same issue of the Pine Cone written by Helen Lambert concerning the disgraceful condition of Carmel's public rest rooms:

It was my misfortune to find on Monday morning, the 13th, that one of the unsightly chemical toilets in the library parking lot was indescribably filthy—how long it had been like that and how long before it was cleaned up, I have no way of knowing. But add that to Mrs. Lambert's comments and it makes one wonder to what extremes Carmel will go to show its lack of concern in the comfort and welfare of respectable people who expect to find this a pleasant, civilized place to visit.

So let me offer a suggestion to the 20-odd public-spirited members of the Carmel Seniors' Club: how about foregoing the proposed new $30,000 shuffleboard courts and instead, mount a campaign to have the city invest that money in some modern, sanitary rest rooms for our countless, disenchanted tourist friends?

And it's just possible that the city fathers, in their infinite wisdom, might find a way to repair the existing courts in return for the club's sacrifice in not insisting on the new installation.

Displeased reader

Dear Editor:

I am debating with myself whether to renew my subscription. I dislike the format of your new editor.

For example, the left column on the front page about what is inside is totally superfluous and the articles are about trivia, not well written.

The photographs, as formerly on the front page, are poor.

The coverage on cultural activities in Carmel, formerly so interesting, are not present.

Why the change? Did it increase circulation?

That delicate matter

By JIM BARRETT
Managing Editor

FIRING AN EMPLOYEE has become a job that requires delicacy and substantial evidence gathering. No longer can the cigar-chomping boss pound his fist on the desk, dress down the incompetent worker and simply bellow, "You're fired!"

There are more laws about firing today than ever before. Just ask any employer. Despite that fact, employees still have the human capacity for anger and often cannot fight back the righteous indignation that led the old boss to slam down his fist and bellow.

City workers in Carmel are watching carefully as the City Council debates who will hear appeals of unjustified firings. Carmel has fired a few employees over the years, but it has a relatively small workforce and one generally regarded as industrious and diligent.

OUNCE-OF-PREVENTION thinking should be on the minds of the councilmen as they decide whether they should allow the city administrator to decide employee appeals. The administrator is the one who does the firing. Without intention of downgrading his professional abilities, it is fair to question whether he should decide an appeal of his own decision.

Even if it seldom is needed, an appeals process conducted independent of management is the wisest decision the City Council could make next month when the issue comes up.

Advantages outweigh drawbacks. The administrator's decision could be upheld by an impartial panel. Citizens would be assigned the job of watching for capricious firings, an early sign of municipal empire building. There is no citizen board in Chicago, notorious for nepotism and bosses. Most important to Carmel is this: The potential for an employee's lawsuit against the city would be minimized because a citizens' appeal board would evaluate the facts in a quasi-judicial manner.

NOW THIS IDEA may be difficult for some city leaders to accept. There is a pervasive belief among some that there is a caste system when it comes to understanding city government. There are those who know and those who don't. This chauvinism stems from the belief the city, not the citizens, know what's best for the citizens.

But citizens include hundreds of exceptionally skilled individuals—bankers, labor consultants, attorneys, businessmen and managers. The single most important thing a city does for its taxpayers is supply services and its employees—not the politicians—deliver it. They deserve flawless impartiality in grievances.

They should be given the right to appeal to an independent panel that will take a hard look at the facts. Its members probably won't have a lot of work, a happy antecedent, but being prepared is better than being sued. And defending decisions in court is not the ideal way to spend tax money.

Comic opera

Dear Editor:

Its name suggests a sound track from a grade-C comedy: LAFCO.

What manner of beast is this? Seemingly, it's a funky aberration with the power—under circumstances described below—to order our lives without a by-your-leave. It's seeking to double Carmel's size through annexation.

The merit of annexation, pro or con, is not the point in question. The manner of annexation is. Consider:

If less than 25 per cent of the registered voters—those outside the village limits—fail to protest voluntarily (without benefit of a public hearing), annexation becomes a fact. In that case, Carmelites and annexees have no say in the matter, none at all.

Wouldn't it be wiser to call an election, allowing time for debate and clarification of the issues? Wouldn't it be saner to protect ourselves against the possibility that 25 per cent of the voters will fail to make themselves heard, thus avoiding the comic opera loophole of the LAFCO design?

It would seem there's sanity in the suggestion.

I'VE FINALLY figured out how to make my fortune. After years of being this, that, and the other, I am now about to come into my own.

You all know the great American free enterprise millionaire-over-night that is the goal of every red-blooded male. The light bulb that suddenly flashes above one's head. Hula hoops, pet rocks, Silly Putty, were the Hall of Fame ideas. Transistors, printed circuits and Hershey bars were others. Great fortunes have been made by being in the right place at the right time.

Now it's my turn. And I've got it made. With my knowledge of law, architecture, finance, construction, traffic, engineering, animal behavior, oceanography, medicine and geriatrics; I'm going to laugh all the way to the bank.

I'm going to become the official, all-department consultant to the city of Carmel.

WEIRD. THAT'S what it is.

In every organization or government body, there is someone with the authority to hire and fire. There also is a system set up so that the fired employee may appeal the decision.

In Carmel, Jack Collins, the city administrator, is the one with the authority to fire an employee. Said employee may file for an appeal review of his dismissal. Guess who is the only one with the authority to review the appeal. That's right. Jack Collins.

THE MISSUS always looks forward to the day after Thanksgiving with great anticipation. She explains it this way: With all the hours of mixing, baking, tasting and cooking, by the time Thanksgiving dinner is served, her taste buds are so full up with "making sure that it's right" sampling, that she's got no appetite. But the next day, with only warming-up, she can eat enough for three people and does. It's almost the only time she ever says, "Thank goodness for leftovers."

MY FRIENDS with the houseful of animals always have a Thanksgiving treat for each pet. The dogs and cat are easy to feed. The birds get some special seeds or worms. The outside birds get a bull feeder and peanuts. The lizard, turtle, and toads are a bit more difficult to find special treats for, for as the owners say, "After all, if you were a toad, what would look like a turkey to you?"

WINTER HAS come early to Carmel this year and it has brought enough cold to scurry about, gathering in the delicate pots, sheeting over the new transplants from possible frost and watering the others deeply.

The stars, newly polished looking, twinkle brightly. The sunsets have started their winter-coat colors, and the overhead wires on Junipero are heavy with gathered flocks of blackbirds.

The closet gives forth the heavy jackets, the drawers discharge the gloves and we take off on a just-past-dawn walk on the beach, our breath steaming like the rooftops in the warming sun.

One opinion

Annexed homeowners may be put in higher risk category

By STEP TYNER

THERE ARE ASPECTS of the recommendation from Michael Johnson, executive officer of the Monterey County Local Agency Formation Commission which the County Service Area 43 Advisory Committee wishes to question.

A suggestion has been made that Service Areas 42, 43 and 39 combine. At the present time, CSAs 42 and 43 have a common fire chief and training officer, a common dispatch system and a working agreement for mutual aid. Together these areas own one fire truck on Carmel Hill.

Recently an agreement was signed between the CSAs to provide services from the Carmel Hill station to service area 39. In effect, we have three service areas with a common chief, training officer and dispatcher. No further saving could be made than now exists.

The effect of annexation is that CSA 42 would have to pay a larger share of the Carmel Hill operation after annexation because such costs are pro-rated on the basis of assessed value. Further, although CSA 43 owns half of the truck, the continuing support of this truck would be difficult with a loss of revenue due to annexation. This truck is very important since it is the "first in" for Rancho Mar Vista, High Meadows and Carmel Hills. This is especially true when traffic is heavy on Highway 1 and it is difficult for Rio Road trucks to answer calls up the hill.

Johnson's proposal for consolidation of CSA 43, Mid-Valley, Carmel Valley Village and Carmel Highlands also is difficult to reconcile with conditions as they exist. When CSA 43 was formed, the advisory committee made a thorough study of the use of volunteers and found it to be very impractical. We have two types of areas—retirement communities, such as Hacienda Carmel and Del Mesa and to a large extent Carmel Views, Rancho Rio Vista and Carmel Knolls and a bedroom community. At that time, the people were adamant in not wanting a volunteer department. They preferred a well-trained professional firefighting group. For that reason, we have had continuous contracts with the state Department of Forestry. Not only are personnel specially trained on structural firefighting, but their training is continuous with daily training sessions. Our people work 72 hours per week and have a fringe benefit package of about 22 per cent. In most fire departments, they work a 60-hour week and their fringe benefits are considerably higher.

WE HAVE MUTUAL aid agreements with Mid-Valley and Carmel Highlands. We fail to see how any further savings could be effected by consolidation and certainly we could not improve our services by augmentation from these districts since the time of response would be too great. The first five minutes are the most crucial in fighting a fire. It would be impossible for one fire chief to control all activities from Highway 1 to Carmel Village.

This committee would like to have Johnson explain what he means when he asks CSA 43, Mid-Valley and Carmel Highlands to study the potential mutual benefit to be achieved through consolidation. We have worked daily with CSA 43 fire department for more than 10 years. We feel that we have a little knowledge of the requirements for fighting fires, including travel time, and we do not understand what could be gained.

So that the people of the city of Carmel have some idea of potential costs to them, from Johnson's report and recommendation to his committee, Carmel would receive from property taxes $115,666 from the annexed areas; from sales tax $7,000; from "in-lieu" taxes $170,939 the first year and afterwards $36,438; hotel occupancy taxes, approximately $38,000; in addition they would receive 45 per cent of CSA 43 unencumbered funds or $128,655. It would cost Carmel approximately $80,000 for road maintenance. Johnson gives no figures for other city services, such as forestry. They would take over and pay for the rental of approximately 100 fire hydrants at $4.50 per month per hydrant.

The Carmel city administrator's report indicates the following: One additional building inspector and car; five additional policemen and one patrol vehicle; three additional full-time firemen; possibly the addition of a street sweeper and operator; an additional tree crew of four people and related equipment.

The area considered for annexation now is receiving police protection from the sheriff's department paid for by their taxes, first-class fire protection from three class "A" fire trucks, 13 firefighters around the clock and street maintenance by the county. If annexed, they will receive all of the services of a municipality and sooner or later it is going to cost.

A LAST CONSIDERATION is fire insurance. I have two letters, one written by our committee to the Insurance Service Office, which determines areawide fire risks, posing three questions; the other from the ISO answering these questions.

Q. "What is the ISO rating for the city of Carmel and when was that rating given?"

A. "Carmel's protection class is 5 which was established in 1958."

Q. "Would that rating continue in the event annexation should occur?"

A. "Probably yes as the area proposed for annexation is mainly residential and such development has little overall effect on establishing fire insurance protection classification."

Q. "What would the city of Carmel have to do to ensure that a class 4 rating continue in those areas proposed for annexation and currently in CSA 43?"

A. "There would appear to be nothing the city could do to maintain the district's class 4 rating upon annexation except to obtain a class 4 rating for the city itself."

It appears that the areas to be annexed now enjoying a 4 rating would be raised to a 5 rating.

After annexation, quaint little Carmel is gone forever. With the impact of 50 per cent more voters, the entire complexion of Carmel will change. Throughout the history of Carmel, the citizens have indicated a fierce desire to retain it in its original charming way of life. Similarly, the citizens of the unincorporated areas extending up the Valley have taken pride in the quaintness of Carmel and its attractions for people all over the world.

I do not think anybody believes that doubling the size of Carmel and its population is conducive to the continuation of its reputation as a charming, quaint, small village by the sea. Not only is Carmel in danger of losing its uniqueness, but we believe that annexation will mark the change from a village out of the past to that of a modern growing small city and that the costs are bound to grow all out of proportion to its size.

(Editor's note: Tyner, an opponent of annexation, is the chairman of the advisory committee to County Service Area 43.)

Plaza toilets

Dear Editor:

In answer to Helen Lambert's annual letter addressed to rest rooms in Carmel-by-the-Sea, I agree that there should be a public rest room in Devendorf Park and the tour buses should be able to stay longer in Carmel so the visitors could see the village.

But back to the issue of rest rooms. The reason Carmel has no rest rooms is cost. The Carmel Plaza pays over $4,200 per year for toilet paper, hand towels, cleansers and other supplies. There is also the added expense of maintenance for cleaning the rest rooms and for plumbing service which adds another $4,000 to the total making the grand sum of $8,200. The rest rooms are opened in the early morning and checked at least every two hours to make sure that they are clean and the hand towels and toilet paper are well stocked. During the summer, they are checked more often. The rest rooms are closed at 6 p.m. for two hours of cleaning.

As for the lack of toilet seat covers, the Carmel Plaza converted its facilities to the new water saving pressurized system which the toilet seat covers clogged. With regard to the dirty sinks and paper on the floor, it is a rare instance that they are not presentable. If people fail to respect our generous contribution to the public by not using the waste paper receptacles, we apologize. The rest room impact from visitors use is great and a constant concern to us. Thank you for putting us on your annual inspection.

However, we would appreciate it very much that when you are on your rounds of civic duty, you would pick up after your little dog: Because, we do.

ployees for advice. He just made the necessary changes to the municipal code, brought them to us and said, 'like it or lump it,' " August stated.

Under the city manager form of government "you can't have a city manager without the right to hire and fire," observed City Attorney George Brehmer.

It would be more efficient to have appeals heard by Collins, a trained hearings officer, Brehmer said. "That way you only have one person to deal with instead of five councilmen," Brehmer said.

A "different council" approved the new city administrator powers, Brown said. "It could be just a matter of readjusting some screws," he added. The council that approved the new form of city government included Brown, Mayor Gunnar Norberg, David Hughes, Bernard Anderson and Helen Arnold. Hughes and Anderson are no longer on the council. Both strongly supported the change.

Mrs. Arnold said she wants to give "more thought" to the appeals board issue and had no immediate comment.

Collins said it is fair to grant him those powers. "I don't think anyone really believes that a legislative body is an appropriate personnel judicial body," he said.

"The council's job is to legislate," he added.

Brunn agreed. "It would not behoove the council to go in and try to change these revisions. We're not paid so why should we get into the day-to-day business of running this place? That is Collins' job," he said.

Gross disagreed saying, "You leave out an important factor when you leave out the council." If an employee Collins fired were to appeal to the courts, the council would have to spend money to defend the action, he said. "There is always the question about how much power is the council willing to give away?" Gross said.

"You can't say our power is being sapped. We are the ones with the ultimate authority to fire Collins," Brunn declared.

Realtors rail against Carmel design review plan

MY GOD, how much further do you want to go? Will you tell us when we can mow our lawns?"

Lenore Foster, a real estate broker and member of the Carmel Citizens' Committee, asked that question minutes before the Carmel Planning Commission deferred action last week on required design review on two-story homes. A contingent of real estate agents coaxed the commission to delay action until Dec. 20. Two of them will sit on an eight-member ad hoc committee appointed to study design review.

The topic sparked a confrontation between Robert Stephenson, the commission chairman, and Commissioner Dr. Donald Davidson. Davidson prodded the commissioners to say how they would justify imposing design review controls. He heard none.

"The silence I hear when I ask for other possible benefits of design review implies that the commission just wants to keep its fingers in the dike. It wants to have control," Davidson declared.

"This is a gross example of overkill," Davidson continued. "We are not being residential. We are being anti-residential by becoming too much involved."

UNDER THE proposal, all new and remodeled two-story homes would require the examination of a design review subcommittee and the approval of the commission. The subcommittee members are Stephenson and Commissioner Sandy Swain. A third member has not been assigned to the subcommittee since Leslie Gross, a former commissioner and committee member, was appointed to the Carmel City Council three weeks ago.

Stephenson named Commissioner Arthur Mertens as chairman of the ad hoc committee to study the design review proposals. The members will include two real estate agents, two architects, two residents and two commissioners. Mertens is expected to select the members this week.

"You wonder why we're getting into design review," Stephenson stated. "It's only because of a cry from the citizens about those large houses. If there had been design review on those houses, they could have been modified some."

"A stitch in time saves nine," concurred Commissioner Eileen Thompson, eliciting heckles from the audience. Design review "would prevent the Hopkins house type of things," she said. James Hopkins owns the so-called "large house" on Casanova between Ninth and 10th that sparked the controversy here last spring.

The planning commission has no "professional members," complained Claire Cross, a Carmel resident and real estate broker. She said the commission should have an architect and an engineer. "Why should your idea be any better than mine?" she asked the commission.

Stephenson, a building designer, admitted the commission had no architect. "We do the best we can under the circumstances," he said.

"This design review will eventually go down to one-story homes. I don't think any of you are qualified to do anything about that. You are going to ruin the uniqueness of Carmel," said Mrs. Cross.

'This is a gross example of overkill,' commissioner says

THE DESIGN review process eventually could make Carmel structures look like "tract homes," warned Leo Tanous, a broker and Carmel Meadows resident.

The council recently adopted tough new guidelines for residential construction. The new law further limits the size and bulk of Carmel homes. "So what is the necessity for design control at this point?" asked Christopher Bock, president of the Carmel Board of Realtors. Bock owns commercial property in Carmel, but lives in Pebble Beach.

"Maybe it is not necessary with these other controls. But until we know the controls are effective, I'd like to see the review," Stephenson replied. The new restrictions took effect Nov. 8.

"What you are doing is suddenly attempting to change the character of Carmel and stepping on public sentiment against more government control," said Ruth Parsoll, a real estate agent and Carmel Point resident.

Davidson said he shared the concern indicated by the real estate interests. "To funnel the wide variety of tastes into one common channel is saying we are going to suppress something very essential about Carmel," he said. Guidelines for residential constructions should be as general as possible, he said.

"I don't know why you say design review will mandate a particular design. There is no effort here to refuse a particular style," Stephenson responded.

"But what are the benefits of design review? I haven't heard any yet," Davidson said.

"You've made a good point," Stephenson conceded. "When the commission votes, maybe it will show up."

"You won't find a house in Carmel that someone wouldn't object to in one way or another," Davidson stated.

"It's interesting that each of the people who spoke are realtors," commented Miss Swain. Stephenson, too, later asked, "I wonder why it is that the only people who feel we are wrong are realtors?"

"I don't believe the people who spoke here today really have an ax to grind. There are realtors who are sensitive to residential property and are genuinely concerned," said Davidson.

Catch to Odello sewering welcome

The Carmel Sanitary District would welcome the 134 acres of farmland owned by the Odello family—but not until the district-wide ban on annexations is lifted. And that won't happen until the treatment plant capacity is increased.

The district board of directors had scheduled a special meeting next Tuesday to make its final decision on the issue. The date conflicts with the hearing on annexation of adjacent territory to the city of Carmel and will be changed, according to board president Charlotte Hurst.

She said if she had her way, the meeting would be canceled entirely because of the district's present annexation ban.

Representatives of the Odello family made their second appearance in two months before the sanitary district board on Tuesday of last week, asking that the Odello East property be annexed to the district and guaranteed sewer service.

The Odellos need some assurances on sewer service because they are beginning a Specific Plan with Monterey County for construction of a hotel-condominium - farmer's market complex on the agricultural land. About half of the farmland would be preserved under the plan.

They cited a February 1971 agreement between the district and the family guaranteeing sewer service in exchange for a right-of-way through the Odello West land for a new district effluent outfall line.

Attorney Donald Freeman, who represents the sanitary district, said he believes the request is subject to the 1976 district ban on new annexations. It was imposed because the Carmel treatment plant is near its 2.4 million gallon per day capacity. The remaining capacity is reserved for landowners already in the district who do not receive sewer service.

Odello hotel plan temporarily withdrawn

All development proposals for the Odello family farmland east of Highway 1 have been withdrawn while a consultant hired by Monterey County prepares a Specific Plan for development of the property.

According to Planning Director Ed DeMars, the document should be ready by mid-December.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors last week hired the firm of Williams, Platzek and Mocine to prepare the Specific Plan. DeMars said an environmental impact report would be needed for the project after the Specific Plan is accepted.

The latest development proposals submitted by the Odellos called for construction of a resort hotel, condominiums and a farmer's market center of shops and open-air stands on the 134 acres of farmland. Twenty-two acres were designated for a county corporation yard and refuse transfer station. Another 68 acres would remain in agricultural production.

That proposal, called the Odello Agricultural Land Preservation System (Odello ALPS), could be the basis of the Specific Plan.

DeMars said the Odello family will pay $5,600 in consultant's fees. He said the cost is low because so much background information is available on the property.

Students told to carry IDs

Carmel school pupils will have to carry their school identification cards with them on school buses because of an increase in misbehavior and vandalism this semester.

District Superintendent Carl Wilsey won trustee approval for the policy last week although board member Richard Wilsdon said it "smacks of Big Brotherism."

Wilsey said the policy is needed because bus drivers have had problems identifying miscreants so they may be referred to school officials and parents when they cause trouble.

If they are carrying identification cards, he said, it will be easier to learn who they are and take corrective action.

Wilsdon supported the policy, joining in a 5-0 board vote. But he expressed reservations about what he called a continuing trend in the United States to require citizens to carry identification with them at all times.

A Thanksgiving Day Tribute

The Pilgrims knew that they had landed in a special place. Our country is grateful to those who came before us, and paved the way for our present lifestyle. We are thankful that they had the foresight to know that this would be the greatest country in the world one day. It is now up to us to preserve our precious natural resources, so that future generations can be assured of the bounty that is taken for granted presently on Thanksgiving Day.

Pebble Beach asks for it

New hearing on bay discharge ban is sought

CARMEL BAY MAY not need special protection to keep it free of pollution, but it would be an "exercise in futility" to fight the state on the issue, Charlotte Hurst, a member of the Carmel Sanitary District board of directors, told a joint meeting of the Carmel and Pebble Beach district boards last Thursday.

Mrs. Hurst called on the state to schedule a rehearing on its 1975 decision to protect the bay as an Area of Special Biological Significance (ASBS).

That decision triggered a chain of events that will culminate in the Carmel district ending its effluent discharge into the bay six months of the year and replacing it with a potential $10 million water reclamation system on land.

State estimates put the construction and operating costs of the system between $60 and $125 per year for every sewer connection in the two districts. This would raise the service charge to customers from the current $6 per month to between $11 to $16. Pebble Beach contracts with Carmel for sewage disposal.

The Pebble Beach board and a two-member minority of the Carmel board have opposed the ASBS since it was applied to the bay. They cite Carmel district statistics showing that only 4 per cent of the pollutants in the bay come from the sewage outfall while 96 per cent enter from the Carmel River and urban area runoff. They also believe the ASBS restrictions on ocean outfall will force the two districts to use inefficent water reclamation systems solely to end their effluent discharge.

THE PEBBLE BEACH board fired off a resolution to the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District before the joint meeting. It asked the district to request a rehearing of the ASBS designation. Pebble Beach is a one-third partner in the Carmel plant. Because of its minority status, it cannot request that the matter be reopened.

The board members seemed to believe if the case is reopened, the state Water Resources Control Board could not justify the special protection and would rescind the ASBS designation.

The Carmel board still is divided 3-2 on what it will do. The board minority—Jim Pruitt and Ted Weller—is in full accord with the Pebble Beach directors.

The majority of members—Mrs. Hurst, Ken McGinnis and Vernon Head—don't like the ASBS, but believe it is futile to oppose it.

"I'm not at all sure even if we lift the ASBS we would be allowed to discharge," Mrs. Hurst said. "We may have other government agencies coming in and saying, 'I'm sorry, you can't discharge in the bay.'"

She cited experiences of the sanitary district in Lake Tahoe where departments like Fish and Game or Parks and Recreation step in to control effluent discharge.

CARMEL BAY COULD come under the jurisdiction of those agencies because of its proximity to Point Lobos State Reserve and because of the marine life in the bay.

"When I see letters saying 'No discharge because it would alter the salinity of the ocean,' my God," Mrs. Hurst said.

"Did they rule that God couldn't rain on it?" asked Dick Lord of the Pebble Beach board.

"I'm not saying it's logical," Mrs. Hurst replied. But state agencies are imposing restrictions on outfall lines even without an ASBS designation, she said.

Mrs. Hurst said she would favor a rehearing of the ASBS if she felt the bay were being protected by monitoring the outfall effects on marine life and if she believed other state agencies would not step in to ban the outfall for their own reasons.

MRS. HURST said she has no worries about effectiveness of the monitoring program, but believes it is impossible to get assurances that an end to the ASBS means the outfall is saved.

"It would be an exercise in futility unless we can get those assurances," she said.

"The state is backing down," countered Weller. "They're beginning to use their heads."

"Oh, you mean they're running out of money," interjected Lord.

Weller said he is "heartily in favor" of water reclamation, adding the technology is not available to do it on a cost-effective basis in Carmel.

If the district can use its outfall as an interim measure, it eventually can develop a pilot water reclamation program for the entire state, he said.

At present, the district is putting most of its efforts behind a plan to use some water to irrigate golf courses in Pebble Beach. A $10 million system would be needed to pump the water to the golf courses, with the extra water piped over Carmel Hill to Monterey for disposal in the bay there.

Public phone suggested on Scenic Road

Besides installing a fenced walkway, Carmel is considering putting a public telephone on Scenic Road. The phone booth would be identical to the semi-open one outside Harrison Memorial Library. The phone would be placed at Scenic and 13th.

A request from Betty Schaeffler, a resident at Scenic and 11th, prompted the study. She sent a letter to the council in August requesting the phone. Mrs. Schaeffler cited an instance when a woman entered her home and used her phone without permission. The woman became enraged when Mrs. Schaeffler asked her to leave, she said. A telephone is needed there for emergencies, Mrs. Schaeffler said.

The Carmel Planning Commission is scheduled to discuss the phone at its Dec. 20 meeting. The Carmel Forestry Commission studied the proposal last month, but made no recommendation.

There is a telephone pole on the east side of Scenic and 13th. The phone would be placed on the west side. The city would have to dig a trench to connect the two, according to Kathy Johnson, a marketing representative for Pacific Telephone. The five-foot high phone booth would be made of bronze-color metal.

After six months, if the phone company does not receive an average of $2.50 or more each day at the location, the city would be billed $12.50 per month to offset the minimum cost for the phone.

Installation also requires the approval of the Carmel City Council.

Review due on three subdivisions

Three major subdivisions in Carmel Valley that would create 52 housing units come before the Monterey County Planning Commission for action next Wednesday.

The Rancho Bonita development will be considered at 10:40 a.m. The developer, Rogclar Associates of Seaside, wants to create 10 one-acre parcels on 10 acres east of the Valley Hills shopping area, near Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club.

The property borders the Carmel River on the south side of Carmel Valley Road. It is now in agricultural use. It lies just east of the proposed 73-unit Valley Hills subdivision.

At 11 a.m., the commission will review the preliminary subdivision map for the Rancho del Sol subdivision on the open hills just north of Garland Ranch Regional Park.

The development proposes 20 lots ranging from 1.3 acres to 2.4 acres on 125.5 acres of land between Los Laureles Grade and Carmel Valley Road.

Conditions proposed for the project by the minor subdivision committee include elimination of any lots that cannot support septic tanks.

Temperance zoning law moves ahead

You could drink a beer or a glass of wine, but not a martini, Manhattan or any other mixed drink in new downtown restaurants, under an ordinance quickly approved by the Carmel Planning Commission on Wednesday of last week.

On a unanimous vote, the commission backed the so-called "temperance" zoning ordinance that would confine cocktail-serving restaurants to the central business district. That is an 11-square-block area on Ocean Avenue between Junipero and Monte Verde. Because that district already has its quota, the ordinance effectively would prevent any additional liquor-serving restaurant from opening. Restaurants that serve beer or wine would not be affected.

No one spoke for or against the proposed ordinance at the public meeting. The commission approved the ordinance after less than two minutes of discussion. The Carmel City Council is scheduled to review it at its Dec. 4 meeting.

No new restaurants that serve liquor would be allowed in the service commercial district (C-1-S). It covers a two-block perimeter around the central business district. It now has six restaurants that serve cocktails.

The ordinance is an attempt to reduce noise from liquor-selling restaurants in the business district, according to a land use subcommittee report. The report said that the noise discourages apartment construction in that district. Carmel has more liquor licenses per capita than any other city in Monterey County, the report said.

"An argument can be made that Carmel also has the largest number of visitors, but Carmel is primarily a residential community," stated Commissioner Dr. Donald Davidson.

Robert Stephenson, the commission chairman, said the ordinance was "admirably developed."

Devendorf Plaza to reopen before mid-December

Devendorf Plaza, the city park that has been closed for grass replanting since Sept. 18, should reopen within two weeks, according to City Forester Gregory D'Ambrosio.

Shallow root growth of the new grass has delayed the reopening, according to D'Ambrosio. The present one-inch roots should be an inch or two deeper before the park reopens, he said. The recent rains have promoted the growth, D'Ambrosio said.

The project cost about $550 for the seeds and rented equipment used to aerate the park lawn. The lawn usually is reseeded every year, but the drought conditions forced city crews to skip the reseeding last year, D'Ambrosio said.

Annexation

services should annexation win approval.

HUGH BAYLESS, the retired city administrator of Carmel, is one of the pro-annexation leaders. Bayless lives outside the unincorporated city limits.

He said annexation proponents are primarily interested in "helping people find out the truth" as they lobby for annexation.

Once people learn the impacts of annexation, he said, "they seem generally much more inclined to favor it."

The major concerns he hears are from people worried that they will no longer get home mail delivery if they join Carmel or who wonder if their taxes will go up by annexing to the city. In both cases, the answer is no, he said.

The supporters are not gathering signatures, Bayless said, "just getting the facts out."

Opponents have mounted a vigorous petition drive against annexation. Catherine Woodward of unincorporated Carmel Point said the signatures will be presented to LAFCO to illustrate public opposition to the change.

If LAFCO recommends in favor of annexation, they would have to get petitions signed again, this time for a formal protest hearing before the Carmel City Council.

Mrs. Woodward said she has found few people who are undecided about the annexation issue.

"They are committed one way or the other," she said. "There is very little indecision.

"We can't see any advantage to joining the city," Mrs. Woodward said.

People outside the city get good police and fire protection now, she said, and are well protected by county zoning ordinances and the county planning department.

THERE IS RESENTMENT because annexation was pushed by the board of supervisors without even a preliminary show of local support. In August, the supervisors sent the annexation proposal to LAFCO.

On the other side of the argument, Bayless said people living around Carmel and affected by its actions "should have representation on the local political body rather than in Salinas."

As far as Mrs. Woodward is concerned, "We just want to be left alone. I'm sick to death the way this thing has been handled."

Step Tyner of the County Service Area 43 fire district advisory committee has another reason for opposing annexation. The all-paid department could be seriously affected by an annexation proposal which would cut its territory—and tax income—in half.

Tyner's anti-annexation efforts have been directed toward showing that CSA 43 residents would pay higher fire insurance premiums if they are annexed than if they remain outside the city. The city has a class 5 rating and CSA 43 a class 4 rating. The lower the rating number, the lower the insurance premium.

An Oct. 31 letter from Clifford Ommert of the Insurance Service Office of California in San Francisco seems to confirm Tyner's view. The office evaluates insurance risks for major underwriters.

Ommert said the annexed territories would not be able to keep their class 4 rating unless Carmel also is rated class 4.

Contacted at his office, Ommert admitted that if the city contracts with CSA 43 to provide the same fire protection now offered to the unincorporated territory, the territories would likely keep their class 4 rating.

Johnson has proposed a contract between the city and the fire district to minimize the financial impact on CSA 43. Collins would not commit the city to such an arrangement, but said if it makes financial sense, Carmel might agree to such a contract.

Plea is made to keep upstairs commercial

A FAR-REACHING proposal to ban second-floor commercial uses in Carmel was stalled by the Carmel Planning Commission on Wednesday of last week. It would make an estimated 60 Carmel buildings non-conforming. The ordinance would force use permit requirements on professionals such as physicians and attorneys who rent second floor office space. The proposal includes incentives for building second-story apartments. It would allow more units on sites and reduce required parking.

The commission delayed action when Christopher Bock, a property owner and president of the Carmel Board of Realtors, complained that the proposal would make the second floor to his new $390,000 commercial building a non-conforming use. Discussion is slated to continue when the commission meets Dec. 20.

"I agree with the commission's premise to curtail apartment conversion. But I don't see how making everything non-conforming would solve the problems," said Bock on Friday. His building is on the west side of San Carlos between Seventh and Eighth. It opened in August. The second floor is primarily for professional office space. The proposal would make the second floor non-conforming and require use permits.

Some 60 Carmel buildings would have non-conforming second floors under the proposal, Robert Griggs, the Carmel planning director, estimated Friday. "It could create some very difficult problems," he said. Among those problems are the non-conformities it could create both for the second level of the Carmel Plaza and the second floor commercial use of the Pine Inn.

CITY ATTORNEY George Brehmer suggested that second-floor office uses be permitted. Only second-floor retail sales should be prohibited, he said.

"I feel somewhat put upon to know I'll soon have a non-conforming building," Bock told the commission. "I think you've already seen an exodus of Carmel professionals into the outlying area. I feel we may be going a little too far," Bock said.

The proposed ordinance also offers incentives for building second-level apartments or converting second-story commercial space to apartment use.

It would increase the number of units allowed on 4,000-square-foot building sites from three units to four. It would reduce parking requirements by 50 per cent. A building with four apartments would have to provide parking for two cars instead of four.

When it met Oct. 2, the council passed an urgency ordinance that established a temporary ban on apartment conversions. But the ordinance is scheduled to expire in February. The commission was asked to prepare a permanent ordinance prohibiting conversions.

There actually has been an increase in the number of apartments in the commercial district in recent years, according to a report to the commission from Griggs. Since 1970, 78 new units have been built, while 37 old units were converted or demolished, Griggs said.

But the report said, "Property owners have been reluctant to construct new apartments above commercial development due to the costs involved in the past few years. It appears that apartment development is at a standstill."

A PROMISE WAS made nine years ago that Dr. and Mrs. John Faia III of Carmel would celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary in Hawaii with friends. That is precisely what they did three weeks ago.

Joining them were their parents, Dr. and Mrs. John Faia of Monterey, Mr. and Mrs. Merv Sutton, owners of Nielsen Brothers Market in Carmel, and Dr. and Mrs. Don Burnett of Carmel Highlands.

Merv said it was the first time in 18 years that he and his wife had taken a vacation without their children.

CARMEL RESIDENTS have been called pompous, but no longer can they be accused of being prudish. Three copies of the best-selling book The Joy of Sex have mysteriously disappeared from the Harrison Memorial Library in the past three years, according to a librarian who asked to remain anonymous.

Library staffers, incidentally, picked up their fourth copy of The Joy of Sex at a booksale last month sponsored by Friends of the Harrison Memorial Library at the Carmel Masonic Temple.

Eight artists to be present

Group show of new paintings opens at Gallery Who's Who

An important group show of new paintings by member artists will open Saturday, Nov. 25 at Gallery Who's Who in Art, Lincoln and Sixth, Carmel. To launch the exhibit, eight artists will be present at the gallery Saturday and Sunday to greet visitors.

Of the 16 artists represented, 12 are associated with the Monterey Peninsula, although their subjects range farther afield and their awards are national in scope.

Present Saturday will be Albert Crundall, 11 a.m.-1 p.m.; Donald Teague, 12:30-2:30 p.m.; James Pilatos, 2-4 p.m.; and Howard Bradford, 3-5 p.m.

On Sunday, these artists will be at the gallery at the same times: Charles Ross Kinghan; Jack N. Swanson; Andrew Kozak; and Chesley Bonnestell.

Donald Teague, N.A., A.W.S., C.A., N.A.W.A., began his career as an illustrator for the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's and McCall's. Other artists refer to him as "a master," while viewers simply state, "That is beautiful!" He "sees" in such a way as to make the ordinary into the extraordinary.

Chesley Bonestell has distinguished himself in architecture, astronomy and art. He is internationally known for his Space Art, as the illustrator of a book on the California missions and a man whose unique style and proficiency led to his name being used as a verb by other illustrators. An "other world" sense permeates his paintings, which is fitting for an artist who believes that "too much reality has no place in art."

Si Chen Yuan was an "artist's artist." Though his formal training was the Western idiom, the delicacy and simplicity of Oriental art were, as he said, "in his blood." The characters of his seal, with which he signed some of his work, translate as "There is no name". . . a subtle expression of modesty and achievement appropriate to work which needs no explanations.

Jack N. Swanson, C.A., cowboy, rancher, horse trailer and Western artist, has the rare ability to live the life he most enjoys and record it sensitively and authentically. Working in oils and sculpture, Jack prefers to rely on memory and a sense of "how it ought to look" to portray the life of the vaqueros and buckaroos of the past and of his own life as a rancher.

James Pilatos is a dedicated and disciplined artist who captures the dramatic contrasts and subtle nuances of his subjects in Europe and the American West. Brushing aside a recital of some very

"LADY OF SPAIN" is a small watercolor by James Pilatos, one of 16 artists whose works are included in an important new exhibit opening Saturday, Nov. 25 at Gallery Who's Who in Art, Lincoln and Sixth, Carmel. Paintings and sculpture by 12 Monterey Peninsula artists, including Donald Teague, Chesley Bonestell, the late S. C. Yuan, Albert Crundall and Andrew Kozak, will be on view.

RAINS MUST WAIT FOR STUDY

Storm waters and a combustible neighbor were the topics at a special City Council session conducted Wednesday.

Because of recent flooding in the southwest portion of the city limits, the council reviewed a report made two years ago by engineer Severance. In the report, he cited the need for a main along 13th Street from San Carlos to Scenic Road, then along that road to Carmel Point where it would empty into the bay. He also suggested in the report that alternate streets running east and west be closed to allow the installation of smaller mains.

Council members said they intend to study the matter further in a special session scheduled next week after Mayor Ross Bonham is advised by a drainage specialist.

A letter of complaint was received from Katherine West, owner of property on Lincoln between Ninth and 10th. She stated in the letter that an adjacent neighbor, M. J. Murphy, had built a storage shed in which he keeps flammable materials.

The shed, in a residential zone, is an illegal construction erected without a building permit, she said.

Bonham said he would confer with the city attorney and take necessary action.

CARMEL BECOMES MOVIE BACKLOT

More than 30 people from the Fox Film Studio of Hollywood converged on Carmel this week for the filming of an adventure movie, The Scarehead.

The movie called for construction of buildings near Point Lobos State Reserve. More than 300 feet of film was shot, focusing on bootleggers and Feds in a dramatic car chase.

La Playa hotel hosted the visitors, including stars Francis McDonald, the "Heavy" Joe Brown and Roscoe Karnes.

FRENCHY CLEARS LIQUOR LICENSE MYSTERY

Several months ago, Frenchy Lafrenz applied to the state Board of Equalization for an on-sale liquor license that would allow another cocktail lounge and restaurant in Carmel.

The City Council filed a protest and asked for a public meeting, but no action was taken.

Months rolled by and the council wondered what happened, along with the city attorney, the mayor and several citizens.

Frenchy cleared up the mystery. He said the papers were returned to him by the state because one line was not signed by Ron Medina, the man who sold him the license. Frenchy has been trying to track Medina down for the last few months in Los Angeles.

And everyone is waiting.

PET POISONINGS THREATEN ANIMALS

A dog that died Monday afternoon in Carmel Woods is the sixth pet to be poisoned with strychnine in the past 18 months.

It is the fourth pet of Victoria Nelsen to be killed in recent months. A neighbor of Mrs. Nelsen reported to police that a man has been making calls to residents in the area. Unless the dogs were kept from barking, he would poison them, the caller said.

IOWA TEST SCHEDULED FOR STUDENTS

The Carmel High School student body is scheduled to take the three-day national Iowa Aptitude Test next week.

Last year, Carmel students earned a 90 percentile rating, 40 per cent higher than state and national averages. Vice principal Warren Edwards said last year's results were gratifying, but "we'll see in a few days whether or not we are maintaining the level."

SUNSET FUND DRIVE TO FINANCE IMPROVEMENTS

Commissioner Ashton Stanley's offer to head an areawide fund-raising committee for refurbishment of Sunset Center Auditorium was accepted at Monday night's cultural commission meeting.

Stanley said the goal of the committee will be $35,000. Contributions will be solicited in $50 amounts. Donors will be recognized as the purchaser of one of the new seats installed in the auditorium.

CARMEL TO LIGHT UP

The annual Christmas tree "light up," sponsored by the Carmel Business Association, is scheduled Dec. 2 and also marks the beginning of the window display contest.

Six prizes will be awarded to merchants. The grand prize will be a three-year membership in the Carmel Business Association.

THE FOREST THEATER was the setting of "Pomander Walk," a play performed there in July 1921. The only identified actor is William Kibbler (far left). Though the performers were well-received, the play's content was not. One observer commented, "They certainly got all out of it that was in it." (From the Pat Hathaway Collection)

Symphony scores success

By SCOTT MacCLELLAND

At King Hall on Sunday, the Monterey County Symphony scored another resounding success. Under the direction of Haymo Taeuber and featuring violinist Joey Swensen, the performance had extraordinary clarity and style from beginning to end.

Swensen, 18, brought remarkable maturity of technique and expression to the Concerto in D Minor by Sibelius, and the program included the News of the Day Overture by Hindemith and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique." Of the orchestral choirs, the woodwind brought forth the most finely wrought playing of the evening.

Swensen's realization of the Sibelius was focused altogether on revealing the richness and intensity of the score. He played impulsively, stylishly and as though he was not aware of how difficult the work is. In addition, he produced a full strong tone, seamless legatos, and a vibrato that matched the mood of his playing at every turn without calling attention to itself.

The concerto has a flavor all its own among the standard repertoire. It has the unmistakable stamp of its composer, Sibelius, who wrote no other work of its type. It has a dramatic intensity and an introspective probing that make it unique. The scoring makes sustaining the work's intensity even more of a challenge, as the orchestra is held down to a low rumble through so many pages, to burst forth in dramatic eruptions only to abruptly return to its undercurrents of aching tension. Sibelius took special pains to keep the orchestra from overwhelming the solo instrument which, in many instances, plays very softly.

Even at that, however, Swensen's playing always could be clearly heard through the orchestra. There were even places where Taeuber could have allowed, with better effect, a bigger orchestral sound. In the first movement, one of the orchestral tuttis clearly calls for emphatic punctuation by the timpani, but the timpani was heard only as a soft tone with no "stroke" at all. But the tempi were just right.

Swensen brought to his playing in the first movement a smoldering restlessness that searched with uncertainty and found with confidence. In the second movement, the violinist brought forth splendid sonorities touched with a wise and tragic character. The last movement, the most diabolical since Paganini, found Swensen's music singing and dancing devilishly and seductively.

In the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6, that composer's finest symphony and one of his best scores, the woodwind of the orchestra were excellent. The work itself gives special attention to the winds, featuring numerous solo passages. The clarinet playing of Al Rice was especially felicitous.

Taeuber led the orchestra in a grand and sensitive reading of the Pathetique. The adagios of the first movement and the lament of the last were handsomely and subtly portrayed. The explosive allegro of the first movement was exciting and dramatic. The Nutcracker-like second movement was treated generously. But in the work's vivace third movement, the conductor played the main march theme, which appears several times, at a deliberately slower pace than the tempi surrounding it. This tended to interrupt the forward momentum of the piece in favor of ponderous heaviness. To be sure, this was a not unusual interpretive liberty, but for those moments it seemed to transform Tchaikovsky into Bruckner and not to the advantage of either style.

The Hindemith overture which opened the concert was as thoroughly "instrumental" as the best of its composer. It was clearly great clever fun for the players. But as an audience piece it does not convey humor; only cleverness.

LAST WEEK, THE Chamber Music Society presented the Yale University-based Rogeri Trio. All three players, pianist Barbara Weintraub, violinist Karen Clarke and cellist Carter Brey, are graduates of the Peabody Conservatory. The program consisted of the Brahms Trio in B, Opus 8; the Mozart Trio in E. K. 542 and Trio by Ives.

Cellist Brey proved the finest player of the ensemble. He was musical, sure of technique and possessed of the high profile of a performer. Further, he projected a clear, clean and warm tone, and sustained a well-made intensity appropriate to the music.

Violinist Clarke was an expressive player with numerous interpretive ideas of interest, but she was noticeably less polished in her playing than either of her colleagues and projected less focus than Brey. The pianist, Barbara Weintraub, had considerable technical facility and clarity at her disposal, but was more craftsman than artist in her musical ideas.

The Brahms work, a youthful masterpiece, a bit uneven but thoroughly inspired expression, revealed the three performers in their various strengths and weaknesses. The performance was itself uneven, but had some splendid moments. It missed several opportunities for the expansiveness of the piece.

The Mozart, one of the composer's most famous, was the most elusive of the works on the program. It was given a serviceable and clear reading, but not the fine touch of the style of the master. But this music is, after all, much harder to capture than may meet the ear.

The Ives Trio, while including pages that get a little long-winded, is a delightful adventure that is pure Ives in style and content. The Rogeri gave it a first-rate presentation.

The Wine Connoisseur

Guidelines offered for correct wine selection

By ROBERT LAWRENCE BALZER

IN THE BASICS of wine service there are a few guiding, but not inflexible, rules: white wines before rose or red; dry before sweet; young before old; still wines before sparkling wines. Reason dictates these customs.

White wines, on a multiple wine service menu, are usually selected to accompany a fish or seafood course, which generally precedes meat or poultry. They lead off with an appetizing simplicity, being tart, crisp and dry (without sweetness), heading towards more complex, substantial red wines, possibly slightly higher in alcohol percentage by volume.

Dry wines, without residual sweetness from natural grape sugar, being tart and naturally acidic, combine well with foods; sweeter table wines, such as sauternes or late harvest riesling wines, or cream sherries and ports, are ideal with fruit and cheese desserts, punctuating the meal.

YOUNGER WINES come before old in the taste-drama of leading to more important wines which are cellar showpieces.

The zing of sparkling wines, with bubbles of carbon dioxide titillating the taste buds, tends to make still wine lacking this sensory excitement seem flat and dull by contrast.

Immediately, exceptions must be noted. That historic old wheeze about "red wines with red meats, white wines with fish and poultry" is only of shadowy value. "Drink the wine that pleases you" is far better advice.

If you enjoy white wine with your steak, who's to say drink red? The almost neutral and bland richness of breast of roast chicken is a superb taste-foil for showing off the aromatic depths of red table wines like Cabernet Sauvignon or Zinfandel. And what about champagne as the most perfect of all aperitif wines? At festive holiday meals, champagne is a luxury which can be served joyously all through almost any menu.

AND NOW, that other basic consideration—temperature.

There are wraparound collars that will give in digits the temperature of the wine. There are impressively large thermometers to slip into an opened bottle. But in 40-odd years of wine enjoyment, I've never found it necessary to take the temperature of the wines I'm serving with any kind of gadget or boutique device.

Basic "rules" suggest that white wines should be chilled for an hour or two in a refrigerator before serving, or 20 minutes in an ice bucket, while red wines should be served at "room temperature" and sometimes big, important burgundies at "cellar temperature."

AS WE ALL KNOW, "room temperature" is a variable, and so is "cellar temperature," the latter being slightly cooler. In degrees, dry white wines and champagnes are recommended to be served chilled to somewhere between 40 degrees to 50 degrees F (5 degrees to 10 degrees C); "cellar temperature" will be anywhere from 50 degrees to 62 degrees F (10 degrees to 16 degrees C).

More important than numerical readings is the common sense behind these temperature traditions. Wine, as a volatile liquid, gives off its fragrance more voluminously as it warms, contracting bouquet as it is chilled. To more fully enjoy any good wine, white or red, in the rounder appreciation of its grape and wood-aging perfumes, the gentle swirl of the glass to agitate the liquid begins the release and warming with the hands on the bowl of the glass expands it.

THERE ARE regional and seasonal variations with wine service with equal dictates of reason. When it's hot, you may expect a preference for cooler beverages, wines included. The cloying sweetness of white wines is ameliorated with chilling. The brisk refreshment of champagne is accented when this bubbly is served icy-cold.

But any wine served "icy-cold" withholds, as a consequence, its indigenous fragrances and odorous elements. There is reason to distrust the wine that has on its label the legend, "This wine should be served well-chilled." Many a poor wine, served so cold that all of its bouquet is paralyzed, escapes the judgment that would have found its aromatic weakness ahead of any virtues of the grape.

respectable credentials, Jim prefers to let the paintings speak for themselves.

Albert Crundall most frequently uses his watercolors to capture moments in our local scenes. The inclusion of birds in his paintings is almost a trademark by Crundall. Raised in England, he says with characteristic dry humor of his much-admired skies, "I always said my head was in the clouds."

Jesse Corsaut is primarily interested in figure painting and much sought after as a portrait painter. His meticulous attention to detail and to the effects of light on his contemporary subjects reflect his interest in the 17th century Dutch and Flemish painters.

Y. S. Lim paintings are endowed with the qualities of happiness and surprise. Working only in oil, he combines the contrasts of two worlds. He presents the harmony, serenity, simplicity and tight subject control of the East with the vitality, experimentation and color strength of the West.

Howard Bradford is a serigrapher. The geography of the Monterey Peninsula and the Pacific Coast offer the elements of space, mountain, sea and sky which he likes to instill in his limited edition prints. He is an internationally recognized printmaker.

Andrew Kozak and Missy Jenkins are Carmel artists who specialize in graphite drawings of animals. Kozak, with careful attention to detail, captures the individual personalities of wildlife, while Missy paints horses and their riders.

Guy Granger is a former cowboy who sensitively recreates his memories of Western scenes through the medium of welded and cast bronze.

Grayce E. Cutler, a native of Salt Lake City, is well known for her personal style of painting water in its many moods. That she is also a poet is no surprise, for she catches the poetic quality of nature and life in her oils and watercolors.

Charles Ross Kinghan, N.A., A.W.S., says, "I am a realist. I do what people understand . . . paintings which strike some chord in the backgrounds of people; paintings of everyday scenes; paintings which uplift, paintings to which the viewer brings his experience and can relate on easy terms." His works convey a sense of peaceful harmony between man and nature.

Conrad Schwiering, N.A.W.A., is known as the "Painter of the Tetons." In recent years, however, he has found the winter climate of Carmel and the subject of the sea more amenable to his desire to paint on location than the deep snows of a Wyoming winter.

Frederic Whitaker, N.A., A.W.S., has been so closely allied to his medium that for many years his name and the word watercolor have been synonomous; he is also a distinguished designer, writer, craftsman and silver manufacturer.

Gallery hours are 11 a.m.-5 p.m. through December.

Sunset Views:

A brief history of theater & government

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, Sunset Community and Cultural Center

IN THE EARLY '30s, the people of the theater—directors, actors, designers, costumers, stagehands—turned to any sort of job that could be found, however temporary or poorly paid. They were willing to dig ditches and they did dig ditches, but unskilled labor also was unemployed and could dig better ditches.

Steps were taken to remedy unemployment and when it was asked, "What has this to do with theater?" the answer was that this economic situation was the rock from which the first government theater of the United States was hewn.

The initial plan to aid theatrical professionals, as it was conceived and carried out up to 1935, was entirely a relief enterprise and, as such, laudably humanitarian. It was not regarded by its founders, by professional theater people, on or off its rolls, by drama critics, or by the public in general, as a theater program. The project was criticized as being amateurish and inferior. The new emphasis of the Works Progress Administration (WPA) on social, as well as on human, values meant that for the first time in the relief experiments in this country the preservation of the skill of the worker, and hence the preservation of his self-respect, became important.

It was announced that the government was going into show business. Commercial managers sought subsidies to tour companies through the country; little theaters sought endowments; universities and colleges asked for grants for additional teaching staff or equipment. But the Congressional act did not permit cash grants even as loans. The money must go for one thing and one thing only (aside from a small percentage for operation), the wages of people. Government subsidy was the next logical step in the development of American art, not an art which would be an occasional unrelated accompaniment to everyday existence, but a functioning part of our national life.

The art projects were being set up to deal with physical hunger, but was there not another form of hunger with which to be concerned—the hunger of millions of Americans for music, plays, pictures and books? Were not these two aspects of hunger a part of the same situation?

Because of the size of our country and because of the origins and aims of the project, the type of theater needed could not be modeled on a government operated enterprise of any other country. Government subsidy of the theater brought the United States into the best historic theater tradition and into the best contemporary theater practice but there the similarity ended. This was a distinctly American enterprise growing out of a people's need over a vast geographic area. The idea of regional theater in some form had been in the minds of many people for many years. Now for the first time the professional theater might also be considered regionally.

Stress was put upon the development of local and regional theater expression rather than on the New York conception of theater or of ideas coming from Washington, D.C. The aims were and still are viable: To set up theaters which have possibilities of growing into social institutions in the communities in which they are located and thus to provide possible future employment for at least some of those who now present an immediate and acute problem to the government. The aims included laying the foundation for the development of a truly creative theater in the United States with outstanding producing centers in each of those regions which have common interests as a result of geography, language origins, history, tradition, custom and occupations of the people. It was not a national theater in the European sense of a group of artists chosen to represent the government. It never was referred to as a national theater though critics increasingly spoke of it as such. It was rather a federation of theaters. Government funds were never made available directly to the Federal Theater, but through the finance division of the WPA stage offices.

The general attitude of skepticism of the commercial theater was inevitable in the first government theater enterprise in this country—an enterprise unprecedented and hedged about with restrictions. Belief in the theory that the work of artists was a part of the national wealth America could not afford to lose, belief in the new pattern of life this work could create for many people—these were the passionate affirmations of this project. It was through these efforts that a vigorous new audience was created, that a theater or value was made available to more people.

Of $4 billion appropriated by the 1935 Relief Act, $27 million had been approved for the employment of artists, musicians, actors, and writers under WPA sponsored Federal Project No. 1, the Federal Theater. This amount was distributed throughout the country with various projects emphasizing experimental and social conscience works. There was a growing concern that a "people's theater" could alter the existing goals of the project. In producing such plays, the first government sponsored theater of the United States was doing what it could to keep alive "the free, inquiring, critical spirit" which is the center and core of democracy. Many important stage presentations which might not have been mounted commercially were able to be produced. Next week, we shall discuss the impact that the Federal Theater had on theater in California. Did you know that the present Forest Theater stage was a WPA project?

ON SUNDAY AT 2 p.m., a rehearsal for the choral music to be presented at the Christmas in Carmel program in Sunset Theater. If you attended last year's party, you know how exciting the program was. If you like to sing, come and join us. Ann Welchner can make a star of you.

Christmas in Carmel will take place Saturday, Dec. 2, at 3 p.m. The musical portion of the afternoon will last about an hour followed by a social hour during which traditional holiday sweets of faraway lands will be served. Bake your favorite pastry and share it with your neighbors. Part of the endeavor will be in cooperation with the Salvation Army who sponsors a Christmas Bureau Basket. If you would like to share your holiday with others, plan to bring a gift wrapped with the age on the outside or some canned goods for the Christmas baskets. There will be a Christmas tree in the lobby of the theater under which you can leave your gift.

Plan to join in this community rejoicing of the holiday season. It is all free.

Happy Thanksgiving!

Food drive starts at Carmel High

By EVE JACKLIN

The Key Club of Carmel High School has its annual canned food drive underway for the 1978-79 school year. Key Club is a Kiwanis youth organization serving the school and community and fostering qualities of leadership in its members. Henry Avila, director of the Padre band, is this year's club sponsor.

The food drive for the needy will continue until Christmas. Key Club President Chris Fromm, a senior at Carmel, said in a recent interview, "We are anxious to get more donations. Only through complete community involvement can the drive be a success." There will be class competition for drive donations. The class that contributes the most cans will be awarded a cash prize. Last year, the donated food went to Salinas Valley farm workers. The Key Club meets every Monday in the music room at Carmel High School. All members must have at least a "B" average.

The week of Nov. 20 is the final week of "Operation Cleanup" at Carmel High School. Unhappy with the litter on the campus, the administration has set Nov. 24 as the last day for the student body to supervise its own litter pickup. Unless students become more responsible for the appearance of their school, a program of confined eating will be set up. All eating will be restricted to specific areas of campus and violators will be repimanded with after school cleanup duty.

Bike ride for Ventana

A leisurely 18-mile bicycle ride along the coastline of the Monterey Peninsula is on the outing calendar of the local Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club Saturday, Nov. 25. Members of other chapters and non-members are welcome to join the free excursion.

Riders will meet at 9 a.m. on the Coast Guard Pier in Monterey. The excursion will continue along Cannery Row to Bird Rock in the Del Monte Forest and return to the pier.

For more information, phone leaders Chet and Bev Gadaire at 375-8995.

Musical director Jan Peterson won the Metropolitan Opera's Most Promising Singer award this year; choreographer Jamie Torcellini dances with the San Diego Civic Light Opera.

Thanksgiving services planned in Carmel

ALL SAINTS'

Holy Communion will be celebrated as a part of the Thanksgiving Day service Thursday. Parishioners are asked to bring their donations of canned goods and staples for Beacon House and Ohloff House, both alcohol rehabilitation centers.

A new service and study program will begin Thursday at 12:15 p.m. It will consist of a service of Holy Communion followed by Bible study and a brown bag lunch. The theme of the study is the different concepts of the Messiah in the Old Testament.

PRESBYTERIAN

The Rev. William Welch will deliver the sermon and lead the special Thanksgiving Day service on Thursday.

On Sunday, parishioners are asked to bring in their Love Loaves for collection. Part of the money collected will be given to World Vision, an organization devoted to caring for the poor and needy. "The Arbors"

When Hugh Comstock designed it in 1930, he had in mind two quaint cottages in the Black Forest tradition. One, with high peaked roof, exposed hand-hewn timbers and a small balcony facing the street, was to be the guest house above the garage. The other, set well back from public view, was twin-gabled and would house up and down apartments.

Today only the original guest house remains. The rest has been almost completely rebuilt this year, with all new materials and new, yet well-aged, character. Gone are the apartments and in their place a beautifully integrated, very private home, linked by flying decks to the old guest house.

First a whole new gabled entrance, many-windowed, fully skylighted, focusing on double doors. Inside an atrium, with curving oak-paved staircase leading past bric-a-brac shelves to living quarters on the upper floor.

The two bedrooms are downstairs. One is somewhat conventional, with level beamed ceilings, a simple fireplace, shuttered casements and louvred closets. The other has a projecting greenhouse section, daylighted from 3 directions. The two have identical bathrooms with mirrored walls, carpeted floors, brown marble sinks and glassed-in showers.

Back upstairs the landing opens to a sunny living room, planked wall on the fireplace side, painted walls on west and north. Small-paned casements at the corners, another greenhouse window lighting the dining alcove.

Across the room a door opens to the kitchen, with yet another greenhouse window, oak floors and cabinets, dark blue tile and artfully built-in appliances.

Off the east side is the den with a solid wall of louvred shelves and cabinets, another wall of open shelves, and a full bath tucked between den and kitchen. Ceilings in both rooms are open to reveal the undersides of shakes on the roof.

From the den, you step out to a broad sundeck with Comstock railings, flowing across the few feet to the 2nd story guest house. That is pure Carmel charm: sleeping loft, Swedish fireplace, bath, kitchenette and balconies.

Except for the guest house gable, all is secluded from the street by a high, natural redwood fence and tall planting. Behind the wall is the consummate English garden with trim, lovely planting, pole-mounted weathervane, sundial, flagstone paths and bits of statuary.

All goes with the house, even the washer and dryer in the garage. Ideally located on Camino Real, 5th house south of 10th, west side. Look for "The Arbors". $325,000.

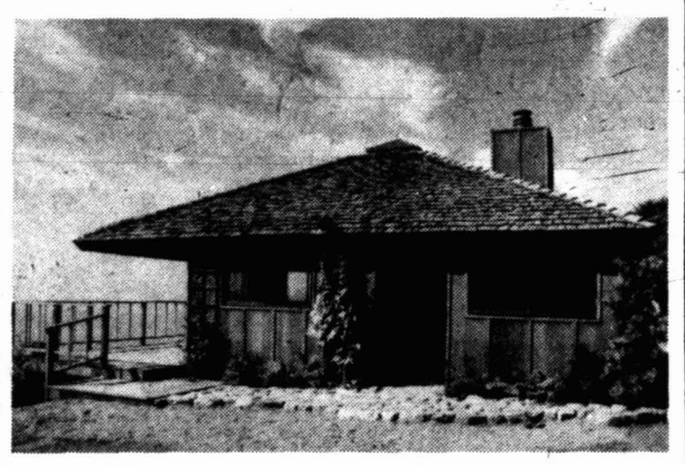
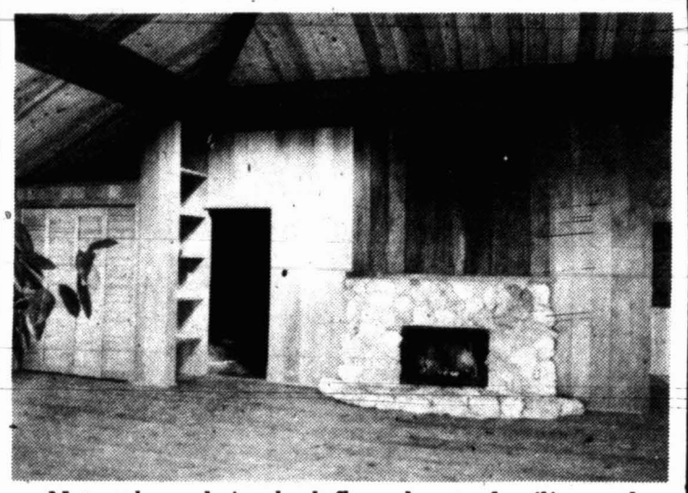
A Home in Harmony with the Big Sur Coast

Mountains, canyons, rock-girt shoreline and the ocean, all extending for miles, are encompassed in the view from Cooper Ridge, high above Pfeiffer Beach, also from a new house approved by the coastal commission because it harmonizes with its magnificent 43-acre site bordering Molera State Park.



A wide deck extends around two sides of the redwood, shakeroofed dwelling further enhanced with landscaping featuring native ferns, young redwood, oak and olive trees, as well as a patio of river boulders leading to the front door embellished with a stained glass panel depicting a coastal scene.



Natural woods in plank floor, beamed ceiling and walls complement a native boulder fireplace in the living room extending into a sleeping alcove with shuttered closet, also into a second alcove with floor-to-ceiling windows framing a vast views.

A handsome piece of redwood forms the breakfast bar dividing the living room from the efficient kitchen with butcher block counters and redwood cabinets. Completing the interior are a bedroom, utility room and beautiful bathroom with pebble mosaic shower, redwood walls and cabinets, quarry tile floor and window wall opening to fern-filled court. Price of this meticulously crafted home and its superb site is $245,000.

No danger of erosion at mouth of Carmel River says state expert

Anyone worried about erosion at the mouth of the Carmel River should not be, according to Clyde Ray, district manager of the state Department of Parks and Recreation.

Ray said there is no danger that water from the river will erode the property near Carmel River State Beach and damage Scenic Road this winter.

Carmel Point resident Jack Hanford expressed concern last week that runoff from the river would run parallel to the oceanfront and undercut Scenic Road after the first heavy rain.

He said the parks department has cleared the sandbar at the mouth of the river in the past, but not this year.

If the sandbar isn't moved, Hanford said, the same erosion that occurred at the end of the rainy season this year could happen this winter.

The Carmel River eroded portions of the beach last spring when its runoff could not break straight through the sand and empty in the ocean.

Ray said the parks department eventually will bulldoze some of the sand out of the way. But, he said, there must be some steady runoff first or tidal action will build the sand back up and block the river again.

Once the stream is flowing at its peak, it keeps its own channel clear, he said.

Ray said if the river begins to erode the sand, the parks department would take measures to stop the erosion.

Mo Orett of the Monterey County Public Works Department road division, said he foresees no erosion problem where Scenic Road winds around the beach.

Adult school enrollment down 50%

Enrollment in Carmel Adult School programs is down nearly 50 per cent this fall and the classes are almost self-supporting as a result of changes made in the wake of Proposition 13.

According to Dan Yurkovich, district director of community services, 698 students enrolled in 40 six-week classes this fall compared to 1,286 people in 73 courses last year.

At the same time, adult school cost the district only $11,000 this fall with revenues of $6,500. Last year the programs cost $17,800 and brought in $2,400.

The district board of trustees put all optional classes on a pay-as-you-go basis because of district budget cuts forced by Prop. 13. The mandated courses are financed almost entirely through state grant money.

Yurkovich told the trustees last week that people are more selective about which courses they take now, and are enrolling in fewer courses at the same time. All optional classes charge $1 per person per hour of instruction.
